Another Man-Woman Monster.—Circumstances have come to light which have caused no little talk, and occasioned surmises among the people of Waterford. As nearly as we have been able to collect, they are as follows:—A man named Rollis died on Tuesday week, and on the following Friday a person, to whom he had been married upwards of twenty years, died also. The usual notice was given to the sexton, who tolled as for a woman; but on some neighbours going to lay out the body, they discovered, to their great surprise, the corpse was that of a man. What remains is still more mysterious. Many inhabitants remember this person walking the streets as a common prostitute, under the cognomen of Sixteen-ribbed Nan, and that the man who married this wretch should never have disclosed the secret to any person, is most remarkable. This creature had been for years in the habit of going out as charwoman to several respectable families in the town, and in many instances has attended women at their delivery. He was employed by several farmers in the neighborhood.—Bucks Herald.
