

IT WAS, I suppose, inevitable. Now that female impersonators have moved on from being comical panto dames with large black boots and hairy legs to looking more beautiful than many beautiful women, it was a fair bet they'd muscle-in on the fashion scene.

When the picture, above, landed on my desk I thought the model girls were a couple of dreamy dollies, but it turns out that only one of them is.

Can you spot the man?

He's the beauty on the left, name of Alan Amsby. When he's not modelling John Stephen's summer dress range he does comedy female impersonations for a living.

For anyone who fancies the clothes, Mr. Amsby is wearing orange, black-and-white printed tricel. Cindy Steeden, your actual girl, is in black and white dacron.
